‘Competing Concepts of Security Detention in NIAC’

8 September 2015

A growing opinion exists that because of IHL’s lack of explicit law governing the legal basis, grounds and procedures for security detention in NIACs, any such basis must be found outside of IHL (most likely under domestic law and human rights law); absent that legal basis, detention would be arbitrary and unlawful. What are the implications of such an interpretation and is this the best way forward?
