28 August 2015

L-R: Dr Quirine Eijkman, Campus The Hague/Leiden University; Ms Verity Harding, Google Europe; Mr Rob Wainwright, Europol; and Mr Marco de Swart, ICCT - The Hague

ICCT convened a public high level panel on countering terrorism through the internet as part of the Summer Programme on Countering Terrorism: Legal Challenges and Dilemmas. Terrorist organisations are making use of the internet for recruitment, incitement and radicalisation purposes, but also for financing, planning and preparing terrorist attacks.

While several countries are working on new legislation providing the intelligence community with far-reaching powers to crack down on communications on the internet between terrorists, EU ministers increase pressure on the social media industry to prevent the spread of radicalisation through the internet. However, these measures can have a serious impact on a range of important human rights as well, including the freedom of expression. This event discussed some of the legal limitations and opportunities and answered the question 'what is at stake?'

Public Lecture 'Shari'a and the rule of law'

24 March 2015

The T.M.C Asser Instituut organised a public lecture by Laila Al-Zwaini within the framework of the MATRA South Administration of Justice training programme. This very topical issue that carries foremost importance for the work of the judiciary in Arab countries attracted much interest from members of the legal community in The Hague, next to the judges, prosecutors and policy-makers that took part in the Matra South training programme.

Ms Al-Zwaini addressed the nexus between Shari'a and its very rich history and the rule of law in the legal systems and practices of Arab countries. Ms Al-Zwaini looked at the tensions between incorporating international standards within the Shari'a-based constitutions and legal practices of these countries, bringing in her own field experience. She emphasised the occasional and regretful mismatches between the reality within the countries that so desperately need assistance in their public sector reforms and the programming of donors that do not take into account local realities, one of them being the significantly pluralistic and traditional system of Shari'a. She explored avenues towards developing a locally and globally shared rule of law culture.

The lecture was followed by a discussion, moderated by Dr Tamara Takács, Senior Researcher at the T.M.C Asser Instituut, whereby the course participants and other members of the audience raised questions to the speaker.

The participants discussed what lessons could be learned from those weaknesses and which good governance solutions might be encapsulated in the future regimes regarding climate change, notably at the global climate summit in Paris at the end of 2015.

Public Roundtable "In Whose Name? On the Functions, Authority and Legitimacy of International Adjudication"

7 September 2015

In Whose Name do or should international courts decide? This is the fundamental question raised in a book published by Prof. Armin von Bogdandy (Max Planck Institute Heidelberg) and Dr Ingo Venzke (Amsterdam Center for International Law), and it was the overarching question debated at a Public Roundtable organised by the authors in cooperation with the Asser Institute.

Moderated by Prof. Janne Nijman (Asser), speakers Judge Fausto Pocar (International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia), Dr Gleider Hernández (Durham), Dr Cecily Rose (Leiden), and Prof. Stephan Schill (Amsterdam), each with their own expertise and relevant experience with different international courts and tribunals, shared their reflections on the issues of legitimacy that lie behind this question. While building on the public law theory of international adjudication developed in their book, Prof. Armin von Bogdandy and Dr Ingo Venzke responded by arguing that ultimately international courts and tribunals speak the law – that is, exercise international public authority – ‘in the name of the peoples and citizens whose freedom they ultimately shape, however indirectly.’ The proposition contributed to a lively debate among the Roundtable’s participants.

Roundtable "Tiptoeing to the TTIP: What Kind of Agreement for What Kind of Partnership?"

18 September 2015

Mr Hiddo Houben, Deputy chief negotiator for TTIP (DG Trade)

In light of the ongoing negotiations for a Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP), the T.M.C. Asser Instituut, in cooperation with the Amsterdam Center for International Law, organised a Roundtable designed to bring to the fore the main contentious issues surrounding the current debate: regulatory cooperation and the Investor-State Dispute Settlement (ISDS) mechanism.

With this event the Asser Instituut, being uniquely located at the crossroads of legal practice, policy deliberations and academic debate, brought together participants with high-level expertise from various backgrounds, in order to contribute to the current policy debate. Participants included academics and policy makers, as well as representatives of the civil society, who assessed the political, legal and institutional long-term consequences relating to the conclusion of TTIP.
