

SUMMARY OF CONTENTS

Table of Contents		VII
List of Abbreviations		XI
One	Introduction	1
1.1	Introduction	1
1.2	What this book aims to do	3
1.3	The structure of this book	6
Two	Theoretical Approaches to Self-regulation on the Internet	9
2.1	A brief history	9
2.2	Self-regulation as co-regulation, as a hybrid arrangement and as substitution	14
2.3	Legal pluralism and mesh regulation	20
Three	Identifying Self-regulation	23
3.1	Self-regulation as a type of regulation model	24
3.2	Self-regulation as a set of rules	24
3.3	Self-regulation as a rule-making process	29
3.4	Conclusion	31
Four	Self-regulation of Internet Content	33
4.1	Introduction	33
4.2	The prevalence of self-regulation in the regulation of Internet content	36
4.3	States and the regulation of Internet content	61
4.4	Conclusion	71
Five	Self-regulation of the Domain Name System	77
5.1	Introduction	77
5.2	The prevalence of self-regulation in the administration of the DNS	82
5.3	States and the regulation of the DNS	107
5.4	Conclusion	110
Six	Self-regulation by Technical Standards	115
6.1	Introduction – Code as law	115
6.2	Setting technical standards	119
6.3	States and the setting of technical standards	144
6.4	Conclusion	145

Seven	Self-regulation in the Resolution of On-line Disputes	151
7.1	Introduction	151
7.2	On-line dispute resolution	154
7.3	States and ODRS	183
7.4	Conclusion	184
Eight	Conclusion: Self-regulation in Cyberspace	189
8.1	Self-regulation on the Internet is distinctive	189
8.2	Self-regulation provides ‘hard’ regulation	192
8.3	Self-regulation is an indispensable source of rules and remedies	196
8.4	Self-regulation and state rules form a mesh of rules	199
8.5	Self-regulation is interdependent with state-regulation	200
8.6	Mesh regulation is a ‘work in progress’	209
8.7	What future?	212
	Bibliography	215
	List of Legislation	231
	Index	233